

Cary Reiss advises hedge funds, broker-dealers, investment banks and other financial institutions on a variety of agreements related to their ongoing business operations. He applies his knowledge of the intricacies of sophisticated business transactions, gained from his experience in private practice and as a general counsel, so his clients see their desired result.

Cary has deep experience advising businesses of virtually all sizes in the United States and Canada on a range of agreements, including non-disclosure and confidentiality, consulting, vendor, software licenses and other operations agreements.

Cary began his legal career in Canada, where he was a partner at a leading Western Canada firm. He also served as general counsel of the U.S. and international division of Canada's largest transportation company.
