

Overcoming Criticism, The Preventing Greater Uncertainty In Labor-Management Relations Act Moves Forward

April 11, 2013 | Labor Agreements, Labor Relations

Adam L.
Bartrom
Partner

The Preventing Greater Uncertainty in Labor-Management Relations Act progressed towards a vote on the House floor. Overcoming criticism by Democrats, the Bill won a 7-3 vote in the House Rules Committee. As previously discussed by us here, the Bill, amongst other things, would seek to ban the NLRB from taking action which requires quorum until the Noel Canning controversy is resolved via: (1) Senate confirmation of the appointees; (2) Supreme Court decision; or (3) the 113th Congress adjourns and terms of the recess appointees expire.

This controversial Bill seems to be coming to a head just as President Obama is seeking to fill the Board with his new presumed nominees which we covered earlier this week. It is believed that a vote on the Bill on the House floor could happen yet this week.

RELATED PRACTICE AREAS

Collective Bargaining
Labor and Employment
Labor Relations

RELATED TOPICS

Labor Management Relations Act