Manufacturers and employers need to protect their trade secrets and the goodwill they have created with their customers. Covenants not to compete have been a dependable way of protecting those interests in the past. This seminar highlights recent trends in Indiana law and steps to take to maximize the likelihood that a covenant not to compete will be enforced when you need to enforce it.

Topics Include:

- What are the essential elements of a covenant not to compete?
- What are recent trends in Indiana law, and how do those trends impact the way you draft covenants?
- What are some common mistakes manufacturers and employers make that undercut the ability to enforce a covenant not to compete?
- Are there alternatives to a covenant not to compete?
- What risks do these alternatives present?
