

John T.L. Koenig, managing partner of the Atlanta office, maintains a national, full-service practice representing management exclusively in virtually all aspects of labor and employment law. He advises employers on the full array of personnel and union relations issues they face on a daily basis.

John offers proven skill in guiding clients through traditional labor law matters such as collective bargaining, arbitrations, strike preparation, union organizing and NLRB cases. His union and industry experience is deep, and includes helping companies in their relationships with virtually every union. John frequently trains supervisors on remaining union-free and on effective and lawful communications during bargaining, strikes and organizing campaigns.

John provides advice and counsel to companies to drive compliance with such laws as Title VII, FMLA, ADEA, FLSA, OSHA and WARN. He works with executives and management to develop and implement practical and effective human resources and employee relations strategies to help avoid employee lawsuits. He defends companies before the EEOC, Department of Labor, OSHA and other administrative agencies, as well as in state and federal courts across the U.S. John drafts executive employment, separation and non-compete agreements, and advises on the safeguarding of confidential, proprietary and trade secret information and goodwill.

John is dedicated to serving in partnership with HR and business teams to develop and implement practical and effective labor and employee relations strategies. An effective communicator, John works diligently on strategic planning and execution that is grounded in his client's distinct commercial objectives, operations and the industries in which they operate.

John has cultivated long-term client relationships — a testament to his dedication to service. He truly enjoys the “people” aspect of serving as a trusted adviser, helping his clients deal effectively with labor unions and managing a workforce.
