

Jeremy Lewin leverages his diverse experience as in-house general counsel, federal investigator, litigator, and corporate attorney to handle a broad range of corporate governance, employment, regulatory and transactional matters.

Jeremy started his career as a federal investigator with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). He brings his unique understanding of the federal investigative process to his work on regulatory and compliance matters with various federal agencies, including the EEOC, Department of Labor, Internal Revenue Service, Federal Trade Commission, Department of Justice, and Department of Health and Human Services.

A highly skilled negotiator, Jeremy also served as a federal mediator and has conducted hundreds of successful mediation conferences.

Following his federal service, Jeremy was a partner at Barnes & Thornburg until 2013, serving as a litigator and counselor to for-profit and nonprofit employers of all sizes, including one of the largest private employers in the world and a host of national associations. Jeremy left to become general counsel of a large national medical association, where he served as chief legal officer for the association and its six affiliated 501(c)(3) entities. Jeremy's time as general counsel helped inform his practical and collaborative approach to legal issues. He knows first-hand that clients value communication, responsiveness and efficiency, and he makes those qualities a priority in his practice.

Jeremy rejoined the firm in 2023 after serving as principal at another firm's nonprofit and employment practice groups. He has represented clients in a broad range of industries and fields, including healthcare, education, retail, hospitality and manufacturing.

An accomplished litigator, Jeremy's true strength is his ability to identify issues early and work creatively with clients to mitigate risk. Jeremy's approach to risk mitigation includes working with clients on highly effective harassment and discrimination training programs and individual coaching
