

County Right-to-Work Laws In Kentucky Already Yielding Increased Job Growth

February 24, 2015 | Unions And Union Membership, Labor And Employment

David J.
Pryzbylski
Partner

As previously reported on this blog, several counties in Kentucky recently passed their own Right-to-Work laws that prohibit companies and unions within their borders from requiring union dues as a condition of employment. In just a few short months, one of those counties, who previously was losing out on opportunities to attract more jobs, already seems to be seeing benefits from its new law in the form of job creation. As the article below describes, since the passage of the law, the county already has been selected by three different companies as a location for new operations. A full version of the article can be found here. Legal challenges are underway, so it remains to be seen whether counties versus just states can enact Right-to-Work laws.

RELATED PRACTICE AREAS

Collective Bargaining
Labor and Employment
Labor Relations
Union Avoidance

RELATED TOPICS

Right to Work
Union Dues