An Uber driver picks up their ride outside the convention center. Entering the driver's personal vehicle and confirming the destination, the person makes small conversation: "How long have you worked for Uber?" "I don't," responds the driver. Puzzled, the person remains quiet the rest of the ride.

For all corporations, including non-profit organizations, whether a person is legally considered an independent contractor or an employee is a difficult question. Luckily, certain strategies make this legal question easier to answer.

Moderated by Associations & Foundations Chair Paula Goedert, and presented by Barbara Dunn O'Neal, this one-hour webinar will address those strategies, including:

- The test & factors to help determine an individual's status
- Common mistakes to avoid
- Steps you can take to reduce the risk if incorrect characterization occurs
- Penalties of incorrect classification
- Understanding of recent court case decisions and their effect
