

Obama Administration Attempts To Block Legal Challenge To Recent Recess Appointments

February 2, 2012 | Labor And Employment

Several organizations, including the National Right to Work Legal and Defense Foundation, have added a new spin to a lawsuit filed over the NLRB's notice posting rules. The organizations have asked a federal district court for leave to amend the lawsuit to challenge the constitutionality of President Obama's recent (and controversial) "recess" appointments to the NLRB. We previously reported on the President's recess appointments here. The Obama Administration recently filed a motion with the Court asking that it block the organizations' challenge to the appointments.
